How To Become a Nursery Teacher

Teaching young children can be an extremely challenging task. A teacher is required to perform not only as a guide and mentor but also as someone who understand feelings and emotions of the children. The growing population of young children in many parts of world has given rise to the spread of preschools across the globe. Emphasis on child education in Asia and Africa region has further helped in popularizing preschools, kindergartens and daycares. According to one study, there will be tremendous demand for preschool teachers over the course of the next several years. The job as a preschool teacher offers financial security and lots of satisfaction.

How to succeed as a Nursery Teacher

Educationists believe that time spent by young children in nursery school is of great value in shaping their future. Though, at most places children are supposed to start their studies from the age of five but many parents begin the educational planning much before that. Daycares, preschools etc. act as base for child's journey into the world of real education. Nursery schools play a defining role in child's growth and development. Nursery schools are of different types. Some are day or residential schools whereas some others are part of senior school. Many private schools have special nursery departments that cater to children in the age group of three to five. Thereafter child is seamlessly included in the proper school.

Nursery Teacher Requirements

Along with parents, teachers play the most important role in the growth and development of a child. The terms 'growth and development' are very much dependent on proper education of the child. Worldwide, there is a growing emphasis on child education. We can look back to the history and find countries with better education models and focus on child education have done well for themselves. Most of the third world countries have poor record in education and especially child education. However, with changing times, organizations and educational institutions with the support of governments are putting in extra efforts to educate children. The concept of preschools is a wonderful result of all those initiatives. Preschools don't really provide lessons and classes to the kids.

Role of Nursery Teacher

Teaching preschool kids is a challenging job but also immensely satisfying. The fact that, preschool teachers are training the innocent children to become successful leaders of tomorrow is sufficient enough to describe the importance of this job. Teaching as a profession has always been in demand. Good teachers are always respected, well paid and greatly sought. No parents would like to go to a teacher who does not have requisite credentials. After all, they are assigning the future of their wards to someone who is supposed to shape them. Because of boom in child education in last few decades, numbers of young individuals aspiring to become preschool teachers has increased significantly. Daycare centers, preschools, kindergartens, elementary schools etc. offer great employment opportunities to the teachers. The demand for preschool teachers has kept on increasing and this trend shows no signs of changing any soon. Because of the huge demand, most often than not, preschool teachers command attractive salaries and perks. A preschool teacher plays a major role in child's life.

Our body is as complex which consists trillions of cells. The cells makes tissues, tissues makes organs and it make all functions of body. Now if we observe the function of cells, tissues, organs it works in so coordinated manner that if this coordination imbalanced it become our physical disorder, diseases etc. but if we able to maintain this coordination we feel a inner and outer harmony, and that is perfect health and wellness. The yoga practices is only solutions which make possible that harmony between body, mind, feelings and spirit and it leads a perfect health and wellness. Normally people misunderstood with few high stressed/stretched postures but actually yoga combining the different limbs of yoga such as Hatha, Raja, Bhakti, Gyana etc, which includes postures, cleansing process, breathing techniques, meditation, japa and many hundreds of practices. Yoga postures are a developed techniques to listen to our own body and bring the attitudes which hidden in posture like if you are in BHUJANGASANA you have to bring the body in a way where it completely ready to face the world. Same things happen in other practices of breathing, mudra, bandhas too. Now if we talk about meditation, in which we bring a harmony between every layer of our existence. And we find our self in a state where we connects with our inner resources such as intuition, intelligence and creativity.

OUR INFORMATION

Yoga breathing and meditation, especially when practiced together, make us feel vibrant and alive, yet calm, relaxed, and peaceful at the same time. How does it work? Focusing on our breath activates the parasympathetic nervous system, helping us let go of the stress we experience in our daily lives and returning us to our natural state of calm. The moment we begin to observe our breath, it naturally begins to slow down and deepen. We can enhance this process with yoga breathing techniques—consciously slowing and lengthening the breath (always within our comfort range of course—never gasping for breath). This takes some mental focus, which can be challenging since the mind is always jumping from one thing to another.
